The independent U.S. senator from Vermont recently filed his 2016 tax return, a campaign aide confirmed to ABC News. The return, filed jointly with his wife Jane, shows the duo reported combined income of $205,801 in 2015, but nearly $155,000 worth of tax deductions, including more than $73,000 worth of charitable giving. The senator and his wife donated more than $49,000 to the U.S. Senator John Cornyn for Senate campaign, according to the Federal Elections Commission. The return confirms Sanders's campaign aides said the senator will focus on campaigning for Democrats running in the midterm elections, which began with Tuesday's GOP primary in Virginia. The Vermont senator won in Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina, but many other states will be holding nominating contests before the Democratic National Convention in late July. The Sanders campaign declined to comment on details of the senator's 2016 tax return, but reminded voters that the senator is "always happy to share what he has done." 2016 Iowa Caucus Results: Hillary Clinton Wins Iowa Caucus after Bernie Sanders Drops Out Talking about his "special moment" of meeting up with 2016 Indian Olympic medalist Prapanorn Wongsuwan to learn about the spirits that come out of this land he has been living in for past four years, Atharvaa has a funny answer for it.
