I was learning to use Playground for some simple functions and used a closure: func worker() -> () -> () { return { return () } } Why is that I have to write the prefix return () for the function to be able to return a closure? A: Because in Swift, you cannot use a local or free variable inside the closure unless you use the captured context (the _ in your example). So you can write func worker() -> () -> () { return { return _ in return() } } instead. However, if you really need a closure, you can do func worker() -> () -> () { return { print("worker()") } } and
