AutoLISP AutoLISP is a Lisp-like language that can be embedded into AutoCAD. It has two flavors: OpenLISP and CCLISP. OpenLISP is the original version, and is built into the Visual LISP product. CCLISP is a faster version of OpenLISP, with more advanced functionality. Visual LISP Visual LISP is a variant of Lisp developed at MIT in the early 1980s, with the intent of allowing Visual LISP source code to be embedded directly in a graphics file. Visual LISP is a Visual Basic Script, and is compatible with the Visual LISP code. C++ macros A C++ macro is a function that, when preprocessed, expands into an equivalent piece of software. The macro can make use of C++ statements in the standard library, or it can use its own specific set of constructs and functions. A Macro written in C++ can be embedded into a.c,.cpp or.h source file, and expands into the resulting binary code or a function call. AutoCAD's first and most popular C++ language is called RASLISP, developed by RAS Software, Inc. RASLISP, or RADASL, is a dialect of LISP that embeds C++ libraries, such as MathCAD, MathScript, UIL, and DirectX. VBA Visual Basic for Applications (VBA) is a programming language developed by Microsoft and used to create macros in Microsoft Office applications. VBA macros can be written as.vb or.bas files and are compiled into an executable module. Unlike most programming languages, VBA can only be used by macros within Microsoft Office applications, and is not a standalone language. It is most commonly used for macros in Microsoft Word, Excel, and Access. .NET For Visual Studio 2007 and later, AutoCAD objects can also be managed in.NET. ObjectARX ObjectARX is a type system that allows system to be defined, compiled and loaded from an ObjectARX class file and for other code to use the objects defined in an ObjectARX class file. Application programming interface The application programming interface (API) is a computer software specification. In AutoCAD, it is the internal framework that provides access to features 5b5f913d15

The U.S. economy added 211,000 new jobs last month and unemployment dropped to a seven-year low of 4.1 percent, as a robust jobs market helped offset the tariffs that President Donald Trump has imposed on imports from China and other foreign nations. Continue Reading Below The Labor Department reported Friday that the economy added 244,000 new jobs in July. Average hourly wages rose 2.8 percent from a year earlier. The unemployment rate fell to a level last seen in December 2008. Trump has repeatedly bragged about the economy during his time in the White House, saying it has been the best economy in modern U.S. history. That assessment has been questioned by economists, who believe the country's economy is improving, but not by the same level as the prior 15 years. Trump also continues to boast that his trade policies with China, which include the tariff increases and levies on imports, has had a positive effect on the U.S. economy. "The U.S. economy is very strong, probably the strongest it's ever been at this time in our country's history," Trump said Friday. "It's growing at a very fast pace. It's never been this strong." "We've had
